MAXYMOO BURNED RI$E MEMBERS BECAUSE WE DIDN'T ACCEPT HIM INTO THE ALLIANCE, SAYS THE PRESIDENT

✍️ MsLadyGrim

"Maxy(moo) acted on his own. He burned RI$E members in Lost Land, including low cp players in our hive, all because we didnt accept him into RI$E. We simply defending ourselves. apparently se also has other enemies like Korolev going after him, its not just about us", responded Bossku, President of State 89, responding to the "New Presidency Under Scrutiny" article published in the July 14, 2025, issue.

He denied that RI$E had enlisted help from another state alliance, emphasized that he took the capital by force, and said that KRAK [#90] "clearly wants to flex that strength".

President laments that State 89 lacks unity, there is a lot of drama and poor communication within the NAP. Bossku recommends the entire alliance sit down and ask themselves, "How can we actually help and grow this server?"

"RI$E is committed to helping 89, a good example is PA13, who we successfully invited from #94. But the NAP needs to do its part too, to help them settle in and feel like part of 89", Bossku expressed.

He closed by expressing that Season 4 will come and then the migration will begin again, recalling that "We've all been playing together on this server since Season 1. There were fights, sure — but also good memories. Instead of suspicion, maybe is time to work together. That's the only way we become stronger and more stable".

On July 12th, RI$E took over the capital. Amid laughter, Mr. Wujo said, "haha yes, I gave up the president for bosskuu🤡". Thus, the new leader becomes the thirteenth president of State #89, and RI$E returns to the presidency for a third time.

RIGHT TO REPLY

Recent days, Luxury Time has taken a firm stance in scrutinizing the new presidency under the RISE banner. While we welcome transparency and informed discourse within our state, it is important that media platforms—especially those with significant influence—hold themselves to the same standards of fairness and balance that they expect from leadership.

One must question whether Luxury Time crossed the line between journalism and narrative crafting. The portrayal of the former president, MrBigDEnergy, fails to recognize the broader context in which his decision not to contest a fourth term was made. His leadership spanned multiple seasons and wars, during which he brought stability, coordination, and resilience to State #89. His choice to step back was not abandonment it was a strategic judgment shaped by experience and integrity. To reduce that to a “mood point” overlooks the weight of responsibility that defined his presidency.

MrBigDEnergy led during some of the most challenging times in our server’s history, often bridging divided alliances and sustaining morale through unity rather than control. His words in the recent article demonstrate humility and perspective—not defeatism.

It is also worth reflecting on the nature of the article’s tone toward the current RISE presidency. While healthy skepticism is vital in any functioning society, headlines such as “New Presidency Under Scrutiny” risk undermining public confidence before the new administration has had a fair chance to demonstrate its intentions. Constructive critique is welcome; early judgment without full context is not.

And as amazing as it is to finally have a newspaper dedicated to the state, one can’t help but notice: we seem very quick to question others, yet we’ve asked very few questions about how and why Luxury Time itself came to life only recently. Curiously, the publication originates from an alliance that, until now, has not been particularly active in state leadership or coordination.

Could it be that the timing—just after a presidential change—was not accidental? Is this sudden voice the product of genuine concern, or a reaction rooted in discomfort with change?

It’s worth considering: were some simply more comfortable under the previous leadership, and now feel unsettled under new management? Is the sudden push for accountability fueled by fear of the unknown rather than a commitment to transparency?

The voice of the media carries power. With that power comes responsibility—not only to ask difficult questions, but to uplift stories of service, history, and contribution. In this, Luxury Time has a role to play. But we encourage the paper to ensure that its pursuit of the truth does not come at the cost of dividing the very community it seeks to inform.

As our state enters a new chapter, let us remember that respect for past leadership and honest dialogue are not mutually exclusive. State #89 is at its strongest when it honors its builders, questions its present, and unites for its future.
